"Yery seldom do we read of an actual case of recovery, where hope had altogether been lost, to parallel that which was Monday investigated by a Dispatch reporter, who had heard in various quarters persons talking to their friends of a care, seemingly little short of marvelous, that had been performed. "I'm glad," said she, "that some one else has come; for though we were obliged to send away poor Jones, yet it came very hard on my husband to have to keep watch all night, the last few days,"
"What was it, do you think, made him go mad!" I asked.
"Why, you see," replied Mrs. Williams, "he was took with a religious fit, and was always thinking he should go to the bad place, and then sitting up in the Innternatinght, he used to broad over it, and get excited and frightened over his own thoughts. He used to scream out sometimes dreadful. We could hear him all this way from the light-house, and then my husband used for 20 and sit with him and try to calm him. However, he got so had at last that we had to hoist the signals, and a boat came off from shore and nals, and a boat came off from shore and took him away; and very thankful we were when he went."

took him away; and very thankful we were when he went."

Williams then asked me if I would go to the light-house with him and have a look round. So we walked along the narrow bridge for a good long distance, and at last came to the rock on which the light-house was built. He showed me wint there was to do, and said he would take the first watch that evening, and would call me to take my turn at twelve o'clock. We went back, and he showed me my cottage, and left me to arrange my roon as I pleased.

Now I was left to myself I began to think over what we had been talking about, and certainly I did not feel so comfortable as I could have wished.

"Poor Mary must wait a little longer, yet, I am afraid," I thought; "It won't be pleasant for her to run about with me to any station to which I may be sent. Ah, well! I don't fear but that she will put up with it until I am a little more settled.

The thought of poor Jones haunted me. What a fearful time he must have had? Heaven forbid that I should ever become like him. But it was not wise to encourage such unpleasant reflections; so, after going to Williams, and saving that I was like him. But it was not wise to encourage such unpleasant reflections; so, after going to Williams, and saying that I was tired with the journey and should turn in, I went back and lay down on my hod. The distant roar of the ocean kept me make some time, but about 8 o'clock I dozed oil, and dreamed about Mary with tearful eyes, and of madmen shouting and gibing; and through all my dreams there was a mouning sound, which seemed to harmonize with the melancholy of my sleeping thoughts.

harmonize with the melancholy of my sleeping thoughts.

Ringa-ding-ding-ding close to my cars put all my dreams to flight, and I startled up in an excited and perspiring state. I then remembered that was the signal for me to get up and take my turn in the lantern; so I answered by two rings, to signify I was stirring, and throwing on my clothes I went out of the house, with heavy oyes and sleepy head. "You have not been lone," he said, "Now mind, you must be very careful with the light, especially if it should wan trimming; but, of course you have learned all that at Blackwall."

"Oh, yes," I said, "I know all about it."

"Well, good night," said Williams, and off he ran to have his night's rest.

The light was burning very brilliantly. I walked about, and looked carefully at everything. The wind was very high, and the waves weremaking a fearful noise in dashing against the rock. I then went down into the watch-room and took up a book, and tried to read, but somehow my ideas were all of a heap, and I could not make head or tail of the Arctic voyages, which the book described.

Then I thought I would write to Mary, and I found a pen and ink; but there was nothing but a newspaper to write on, so I was obliged to give that up. One o'clock—

I followed him to the light-house, and went outside the lantern, and there, on the floor of the gallery, were two large sea-gulls apparently dead!

"This was the goblin," he said, again laughing, "This kind of ghost very often troubles new keepers, especially on a dark night; the birds fly with all their might toward the light, and come bump against the lantern glass, and are often killed. As to what you said about the clock starting on, let me advise you to be more careful in the future and learn to keep your eyes open, for actually, if were to say anything about it up at the house you would be dismissed from the service."

The best evidence of a physician's success is the testimony of his patients. The increasing demands for my professional services prove that I have dealt homeonly and fairly with those who have consulted me. I never use a patient's name without permission, though I have many hundred certificates from those whom I have cured after they and been pronounced incurable. A through medical education with many years hospital experience and familiarity with theraptic senters, a close observance of temperamental peculiarities and strict attention to hypicale management insures success,
